Curious Trophies.

David Galusha, a well known fox hunter of Shaftsbury, has been ex-hibiting two fox skins that have been generally admired and one of which has caused considerable curiosity. One of the skins is that of a "cross-fox," the progeny of a common red fox and a black or silver gray. Specimens of this hybrid are not uncommon in northern New England but the skin possessed by Mr. Galusha is an unusually fine one, the entire back being dark gray with no brown markings. The other skin is that of an Alaska blue fox such as are raised for their fur on the Alcutian islands in Berling sea. How the animal ever found its way into Vermont is a mystery and can be accounted for in only one way. Several years ago several of these foxes were brought from Alaska to Randolph, and presented to a farmer who put high wire fence about a tract of wild land with the intention of raising the mimals for their fur. One or more of the foxes may have escaped and wandered to Shaftsbury to fall a victim to Mr. Galusha's gun. The fur is about the color and texture of plucked beaver but is longer and not so firm.

Didn't Belong to Colorado.

In the early days of Leadville there was a singular character living by the name of Major Martin McGinnis. The major was the important man of the camp, and when any distinguished parties came to the city they were received by Major Martin McGinnis and presented with the freedom of the camp on a gold plate. The French government sent three mining engineers over to examine and to report upon the mineral deposits of this locality. They were received by Major Martin McGinnis, who put them in carriages and took them around the camp. As they were going up California gulch the Frenchmen suddenly jumped out of the carriage and commenced to hammer and chisel upon a large black bowlder that lay alongside the road. The major watched them gesticulating to one another, and he finally said to the interpreter: "What do they mean? What are they talking about?" The interpreter said, "They say that rock don't belong here." The major said: "The deuce it don't! You say to those foreigners that I won't stand for them coming over here and running down our country. Tell them that they can find anything anywhere in Colorado."

The Frenchmen were right, however, for this black rock was a meteor and had fallen from the skies .- Leadville Herald-Democrat
